Mistake by Delta loading fares allows travelers to book bargain basement fares with airline.

ATLANTA – December 27, 2013 – Over a dozen travelers using Teplis Travel's customized corporate fare website, which uniquely highlights the lowest available fares on a given route, got to take advantage of extremely low fares during a recent unexpected pricing event at Delta. Business travelers were surprised to find round trip flights from Atlanta to Dallas for $27; and from Atlanta to New York for $36. The low, low fares were only available from 10:00am until Noon on December 26, and were then pulled down. Over a dozen travelers using the Teplis website got to take advantage of the deep discount fares before the airline restored rates more in line with market conditions. Per new Department of Transportation regulations aimed at truth in advertising, airlines are required to honor any mistake in fares offered, so the lucky travelers got to keep their savings.

This type of occurrence has happened more frequently of late, most recently in September when United was selling tickets for $5 and $10 apiece. Comments on travel industry blogs have suggested these "mistakes" are in reality promotional ploys, where a few outrageously low fares are sold and then publicized via the news media causing a rush of traffic to their website looking for huge bargains. The same effect took place Thursday, when Delta experienced increased traffic throughout the afternoon.
